Knowledge Exchange - Stories from the Field

Graduate School Seminar Series

Knowledge Exchange is a concept generally used to describe the generation of knowledge between communities, policy-makers, practitioners and researchers. This seminar seeks to share stories from across the Centre for Health Equity of our experiences with knowledge exchange. Professor Kerry Arabena will describe the process of knowledge exchange as applied to The First 1000 days project - a research project that seeks to establish an evidence-based data set to support health planning for Indigenous children from conception to age two. Fiona Lange will share the need to design a flexible, organic approach to knowledge exchange reflecting on her experiences in promoting Indigenous eye health. Dr Richard Williams will describe his experiences working with a range of community and industry partners in the Carlton Connect initiative. Dr Rebecca Armstrong will provide an overview of the work conducted by Public Health Insight to explore the impact of knowledge exchange strategies in a range of decision-making contexts. Dr Melanie Davern will chair this session.
