Kristen Smith is a researcher in the Centre for Health Equity at the University of Melbourne. Smith predominantly undertakes interdisciplinary research that focuses on various facets of health and wellbeing for vulnerable populations, particularly from a political economy perspective. Her research spans both local and global domains, ranging from macro-micro studies of international health systems, through to case study work in Australian Indigenous communities.