The Hallmark Ageing Research Initiative (HARI)

Associate Professor Briony Dow
Co-Chair, HARI & Director, National Ageing Research Institute; and

Dr Ruth Williams
Academic Convenor, HARI & Research Fellow, Centre for Workplace Leadership

The Hallmark Ageing Research Initiative (HARI) was created in response to the recognition of ageing as a significant social issue which requires an interdisciplinary approach. HARI aims to help co-ordinate national and international collaborative projects with the involvement of community and industry partners. HARI focuses on the following six research clusters: technology and ageing, design for ageing, Ageing in Low and Middle Income Countries, Leadership in Ageing, Healthy Ageing and Social Aspects of Ageing Across the Lifespan.

Briony Dow manages a program of research encompassing improving care for older people in Victorian health services, falls and balance, healthy ageing, diversity in ageing, and ageing and mental health (including carers’ mental health, elder abuse and intergenerational relationships).

Ruth Williams’ research focuses on the relationship between age and the labour market, exploring the experiences, meaning and importance of older worker’s work-life transitions, employer attitudes, workplace policy, the relationship between health and employment, and caregiving and labour force participation.
